

Introduction and Premise:

Our game is set in a village with a group of young village boys who get into mischief and also love making stuff with wood. (they've built their own knight armor straight with wood !!). Well it turns out their fun lives are about to be cut short by an unexpected disaster. It seems that news has arrived from the capital city newspaper to their village that the world is about to end in.....not 1 year,.....not 1 month but in 16hrs!!!! (same day the news came as it was late).

So what do we do now!? One of our creative friends comes up with a crazy idea. He suggests we make our own rocket to escape to space!!!! And for this noble endeavour of our friend group we must take on a daunting task -> get the stuff needed to build the rocket from the town.

What begins as a seemingly ordinary day quickly turns into a chaotic adventure through the village. The player explores the town, interacts with the residents and local shopkeepers following their daily routines, collects materials, and completes a series of small mini-games to gather everything needed to finish the shuttle.

-----SPOILER ALERT-----

After finally assembling the rocket and preparing to escape, the player and his friends discover the truth: *the terrifying comet isn't destroying the world at all. It turns out it was a comet which would go down in history to what we now know today as the Hailey's comet.

Instead of launching into space, the two friends sit beside their unfinished rocket and watch the comet together.

Gameplay:

Players can:

move around the given map interact with certain NPCs,

collect items,

and trigger dialogue and comic-style cutscenes.

NPCs will follow simple predefined paths and routines, making the village feel alive while providing tasks and information needed for progression.

After collecting all the required components, the player goes back and assembles the rocket with their friends.

This establishes a playable gameplay loop. That we will tune to make sure can suffice for 15+ mins of gameplay and not too excessive to go beyond 20 mins.

#Presentation style:

2D RPG

Art style: pixel art

POV: top down 3:4 (Stardew valley-like camera angle)

The story is presented through comic-style cutscenes to remain in line with the event theme.

Themes:

The game uses a comic-inspired visual style, with comic-style cutscenes, exaggerated character expressions, humorous dialogue, and quirky NPC interactions. The serious idea of the world ending is presented from the perspective of a group of young guys. Despite the apocalypse-themed premise, we try to keep the game colorful, and lighthearted through exploration, simple mini-games, and humorous situations, keeping the experience playful rather than dark or frightening.

The entire adventure is built toward a final reveal. After spending the game collecting materials and building a rocket to escape the supposedly approaching disaster, the player discovers that the comet is actually Hailey's Comet and poses no threat to Earth. The rocket (which quite honestly would've never worked anyways) was never needed, turning the player's entire mission into an unexpected and humorous adventure and bringing the Comic, Light, and Twist themes together.
